Goodbye to a True Friend

— By: Phil Andrews —

A number of years ago, in the beginning of high school, I played for a minor hockey team in a league based in a small town north of Sudbury called Copper Cliff. One team in our league possessed three players with whom I was familiar. Two of the three, John Hennessy and Tom Cull were very good friends of mine. They were small, swift and talented players. The third was a fellow of imposing size. In my opinion then and now he was the most intimidating player in our league for he possessed a perfect marriage of the power and the finesse skills that make up any hockey player. Off the rink I had known this young man for a very short time as we were members of the same school and shared a number of good friends, however he and I had developed a bond. He and I were at the poles of talent of the hockey talent spectrum. He was a player the league knew and I was an overweight 'Albert-like-figure' revered only by my parents and the arena's canteen management. However, even then, this athletic dynamo obliterated social cliques and regarded me as a fellow hockey player at an age when peer pressure made such an action very infrequent.

One game that year we were playing the team with these three and though John and Tom were faring well, our team was only aware of the presence of this other player. With height and skill and flaming red head hair pouring from his helmet, my new friend was dominating the ice as a man would among boys. He had pounded all of our dominant players with thundering body checks and his short fuse and his on-ice mean streak had made every player on our team make absolutely certain that they skated with their heads up, always aware and defensive when he was on the ice. He was a force, scoring and belting with ease and yet reckless abandon. On one shift I was in the corner, feebly fumbling with the puck when, from one side of the rink charged this player. I was doomed just as so many of my teammates before me. I prepared to be hit. Boom...just to the side of me the boards rocked. he turned and lightly bumped me with his elbow, then smiled, winked and scooted away with the puck. He had spared a helpless friend both the pain of his hit and the humiliation of having all the arena know that he had taken pity on me. In the heat of the battle he had remained a person and a friend.

This other player in my anecdote was a true gentleman and a kind friend named Scott Guindon. Over Laurentian's study week, Scott died in a terrible snowmobile crash which claimed two other young men as well. Scott was a twenty year old, second year Arts student at Laurentian. He was an economics major and was involved with the University of Sudbury. He was not loud, but he was a noticeable figure on the campus because of his height, his mane of red hair and a permanent smile.

Five years of high school and nearly two years of Laurentian have left me with no doubt that I have known a sincere and honest man in living in Scott's life. I was one of a tremendous number of diverse friends. Scott always had a smile and he always had a hello for me and, knowing him, it was the same for all of us. All of Scott's friends have a special memory of him and each is a tribute to him. The hockey memory is a favourite of mine, but in an all too short life, Scott was also an accomplished football player, a dedicated student, a hard worker at various jobs, as well as a loving son, elder brother and boyfriend. He was a friendly man who could take a joke and who emitted warmth.

Scott Guindon made his mark on many. In his beautiful, personal way he touched and accomplished much in the world. Thank you Scott for being Scott. Those who knew you are all richer and those who did not should wish that they could have.

A bursary in the name of Scott Guindon is being established at St Charles College where Scott spent five years as a hard working student and as an equally dedicated athlete. Any people who are interested in making a donation towards the memory of Scott should contact the school itself or myself at Lambda.

Welcome Back!

On Behalf of the entire Lambda staff I would like to take this opportunity to welcome everyone back from spring break. I hope everyone had a relaxing, and restful time. The next few weeks or so will be quite hectic for us all. Just think, we've only got until April 12th before the summer holidays, but we have lots of work to do before that. Hang in there no matter how many essays you have yet to write or how much reading you have yet to catch up with. Remember it's all worth it in the long run...someday we'll all be rich right?

Good Luck with you studies,

T. Morgan

Financial problems need not be a barrier to part-time studies at Laurentian University.

Many part-time students (and prospective students for that matter) are unaware of the many student aid programmes available at Laurentian University. Part-time students may be eligible for assistance from a variety of government-funded programmes or private institutional scholarship and bursary funds.

For example, the Canada Student Loans Programs for Part-time Students provides interest-bearing loan assistance to students who have cash-flow problems and are unable to raise sufficient cash to pay immediate educational expenses. Interest charges begin on the date the loan is negotiated and repayment begins 30 days later. To be eligible for this assistance, students must be Canadian citizens or permanent residents, must be enrolled in a study program of between 20% and 50% of a full course load and their gross family income must fall within a pre-established range that is revised annually.

Also, part-time students may be eligible for grants and loans through the Ontario Student Assistance Programme (OSAP), a joint Federal/Provincial aid plan. Because students are expected to contribute to their own educational expenses and OSAP is based on a need assessment, the amount of grant or loan students can expect to receive will vary depending on the students' income (or that of the parents or spouse where applicable) and other factors such as percentage of course load, other income such as academic awards or part-time employment during the school year, high assets, etc.

With respect to private or institutional awards, there are a number of scholarships financed by Laurentian University and the Association for Part-time Students that are automatically awarded to the top students based entirely on academic performance in the previous school year. A varying number of bursaries valued between $100 and $300 has also been established to help the part-time student in meeting his/her school fees. A bursary application form is required and bursary assistance is awarded on the basis of established financial need.

Individuals who want a post-secondary education and are qualified for such an education should not be denied that opportunity. Laurentian University strongly encourages all highly motivated prospective students from low-income families or individuals who have encountered unique financial hardships preventing them from attaining their education, to discuss with its Financial Aid counsellors the various options that, in many cases, could eliminate costs as a barrier to post-secondary studies. For additional information on the above programmes or to further discuss eligibility for student assistance, please call Toll Free at:

Gone But Not Forgotten

Scott Russell Guindon

On Saturday February 17th, a tragedy took place that would strike pain and sadness into the hearts of many people. On that day, Scott Guindon was killed in a snowmobile accident on Lake Penaeage. Scott was a student here at Laurentian and a good friend to many people. We, some of his friends are writing this article as a tribute to a great guy.

For those who did not know Scott we can honestly say that he would have given the world to anyone who had asked. he always had a good comment to make and an extra smile to cheer a down friend. Multicoloured notes and organization were his specialties.

Life for those of us who are left will never be the same without you Scott. We will forever remember you waiting for "the bus" of Darren, Brent, Jason and Dean to take you to the pub. Our heart to heart talks, euchre games and beer can castles. There will always be a place at our table for you. We will probably keep waiting for you to show up even though we know we shouldn't.

Comment ca va, Mach I's, and run down Ford's are all trade marks of you Scott. Forever missing but never forgetting. So here's to you Scott Guindon. Where ever you are we hope you know we love and miss you dearly.

With Love
Your Friends Always.

Unilingualism vs Bilingualism

By: Chris Land

They may not have known it at the time but the city council of Sault Ste Marie have set off yet another round in the debate over Bilingualism. This is not an old argument. Canadians have been bickering over this since the Conquest in 1759. The Soo's decision to declare itself English only has had quite a reaction in Sudbury. The Sudbury Star on the 13th of February had half of page 19 dedicated to printing letters from readers on this very subject. About half of the letters applauded the Soo's actions and the other half condemned them. People write letters to newspapers for a lot of reasons but nothing seems to raise the ire of more people than the question of bilingualism.

Those against bilingualism argue that the money spent on bilingual services can be better spent on other things or bring about lower taxes. These people feed the new movements in Canadian politics to end bilingualism and bring about an anglophone country. Such Political parties as the Confederation of Regions love this type of controversy. This gives them free publicity in the press and raises their public profile giving them a better chance in the next election.

Those who are in favour of a bilingual country make charges and accusations of bigotry and Facist tactics towards those who would make Canada a unilingual country. The French are a significant minority in Canada and they feel threatened any time someone removes French rights anywhere in Canada. That is understandable. This perceived threat has given the Quebec government justification to curtail minority language rights in that province. Many would say, that is inexcusable. It gives ammunition to those who complain about French being "Shoved down our throats". One wonders where this bickering is going to end.

Of all the letters written to the Star, by far the best one was by someone who is neither French nor English. Frank Petkovich believes that creating a bilingual country "is a worthy objective and would give the Nation a distinct Character." He condemns all governments that have curtailed minority rights; that includes Quebec and all the Ontario municipalities that have declared themselves unilingual. He calls for understanding on the part of everyone instead of more divisive bickering.

If you listen to the arguments on both sides of the issue you will find that most of the English who are upset over bilingualism are not bigots but are tired of having French forced onto them. The French are not trying to force anything on anybody, but are simply trying to protect their language and culture. Canadian's have to decide whether or not the arguing and the bitterness is worth it. Are we going to become a little America with it's melting pot or are we going to work harder and develop the Canadian Mosaic?

Conway and Campbell Announce $1.3 Million Grant to Laurentian University.

Laurentian University will receive a grant of $1.3 million from the province towards the alteration of space in the R.D. Parker Tower, Sterling Campbell, MPP for Sudbury announced today on behalf of Sean Conway, Minister of Colleges and Universities. "I am pleased that this funding will allow Laurentian University to better serve the needs of the Sudbury community through expanded teaching and research facilities and consolidated student services," Mr. Conway said.

Space for these improvements will become available in the R.D. Parker Tower in the spring of 1990 following the move of the existing library to the new J.N. Desmarais Library. The $12.5 million building was constructed with the aid of $8.3 million in provincial capital grants.

When the alterations are complete, the university will be able to vacate and pull down a number of temporary portable facilities. Mr. Campbell said, "This funding means more space for students and faculty at Laurentian and affirms the government's commitment to providing access to postsecondary studies for residents of Northern Ontario."

Mr. Conway said he will be making further announcements regarding other capital commitments to Ontario's colleges and universities over the next few weeks. Today's announcement is part of the government's $122.7 million commitment, which was made in November, 1989, to fund capital projects at Ontario's postsecondary institutions.

The Boys of Summer

By: Chris Land

Horror of Horrors. The unthinkable has happened. The warnings were there but no one wanted to believe that it could actually happen. When your modest scribe woke up this morning it was on the radio. The so called experts say that the changing of the seasons is inevitable but spring has been put on hold ladies and gentlemen. Yes, that's right. Spring training, to start Thursday February 15th has been postponed due to a team owners lockout.

Oh, Woe's me. It would be better if I had never been born. A spring without hope springing eternal. A time when your favourite team, still has a chance to win it all in a Cinderella story season. Oh, summer without baseball. They might as well blot out the sun and leave us in a frozen waste with nothing to do but wait until we die. When will it end? When will they pound their agents into plowshares? How long will we wait until the home team is allowed to take the field and an umpire will yell "Play Ball!"? For now I wait in bitter misery until the boys of summer can play once more.

Law Foundation Grants $50,000 to Laurentian University Library.

On January 30, 1990, the Law Foundation of Ontario announced a $50,000 grant for new legal texts and law digests for the Laurentian University Library. The grant was made in response to a joint application by the Library, the Laurentian University Department of Law and Justice, and the Sudbury and District Law Association. It represents the first collaborative effort in the region between this university and the Law Association.

The application was authored by Roy Bonin, Director of the L.U. Library; Charlotte Neff, Acting Dean of Social Sciences; Patricia Hennessy, Director, Academic Staff Relations and Legal Affairs at the University; and Michail Hennessy of the Sudbury law firm Paris and Hennessy.

The Law Foundation grant will significantly increase law-related holdings in the J.N. Desmarais Library in both English and French.

Both the Law Association and the L.U. Department of Law and Justice will have input into the selection of materials to be purchased. In addition, the director of the Library will move to formally arrange access for members of the Law Association to the holdings of the J.N. Desmarais Library.

The objectives of the Law Foundation of Ontario are to establish and maintain a fund to promote legal education, research and aid; and to foster the establishment, maintenance and operation of law libraries. While the bulk of the Foundation's annual grants goes to law school libraries, Laurentian and the Law Association pointed out that Northeastern Ontario lawyers, law students and judges need greater local access to legal resources in both official languages. The application received widespread support from the region's educators, lawyers and judges.

Open Letter:

From: Doug Godsack, Dean,

Jon Gonder, Dean, Faculty of Humanities
Charlotte Neff, Dean,

Schools

The purpose of this letter is two-fold.

The first is to let you know, well in advance, that all full-time students who intend to return to Laurentian next September will be required to Advance Register during the period mid-July to mid-August.

Secondly, in order to ensure that you Advance Registration goes as smoothly as possible, we have designated the period March 19 to March 30 for Advance Registration Counseling.

You should make an appointment now to meet with your Academic Adviser during the counseling period. Your Adviser will assist you in selecting courses for next year, resolving problems you might have in meeting degree requirements, and suggesting options which are open to you.

This is not a formal commitment to register for next year, but a counseling session. It is in your best interests to take advantage of this opportunity — don't miss it!

Good luck with your studies.

CARDIOVASCULAR FITNESS

Conditioning For a Healthy Heart

Fitness is a combination of muscular performance, body composition, and cardiovascular fitness. Of these components, cardiovascular fitness is perhaps the most important because it reflects the body's ability to use oxygen to release energy. Improving your cardiovascular fitness increases your supply of oxygen (and energy), and can lead to prolonged endurance and optimum performance. By conditioning your cardiovascular system, you can also decrease your risk of heart disease, stroke, high blood pressure, and other life-threatening diseases.

The Conditioned Heart

The normal heart beats at a rate of approximately 70 beats per minute at rest or about one hundred thousand beats a day. The well-conditioned heart can actually beat as few as 40 times a minute at rest or approximately fifty thousand beats a day. In short, a well-conditioned heart conserves energy. It can supply oxygen-rich blood to the rest of the body with half the effort.

Aerobics for Heart Health

Since the heart is a muscle, it can become bigger and stronger through exercise that progressively increases the body's demand for oxygen. This type of exercise is called "aerobic" which means "with oxygen." Aerobic exercise involves steady, continuous motion of the large muscles which places a large and continuous energy demand on the heart.

Aerobic activities—walking, running, swimming, cycling, etc.—should be intensive enough to raise and sustain your heartbeat to a target heart range or THR (60–80% of its maximum capacity) for at least 20–30 minutes.

For optimum benefits, you should exercise aerobically within your THR for at least 20–30 minutes a minimum of 3 times a week.

The End Result

A well-conditioned heart, like any muscle, is stronger and more efficient than average. By exercising within your target heart range for 20–30 minutes 3 times a week, you can condition your heart and enjoy the benefits of a more fit and healthy lifestyle in general. ☒

Finding Your THR

Your THR is the safest range of heartbeats per minute during exercise. To find your approximate THR, subtract your age from 220 and multiply the answer by 60% and by 80%. Aim for the low range when you first begin, gradually working up to the higher range. Count your heartbeats by taking your wrist or neck pulse for 15 seconds and multiplying the count by 4. If you have an existing medical condition or family history of heart disease, your healthcare professional can determine your best THR.

The well-conditioned heart is larger and stronger than average and can do more work with less effort.

Every Canadian has a 1 in 20 chance of getting Diabetes and there is no cure. Yet. It is the leading cause of blindness and kidney failure. It is the third leading cause of death for Canadians since having it can and does result in heart disease, stroke, amputation and other serious conditions.

Sudbury area mayors will sign a proclamation February 28, Proclaiming March as "Diabetes Month" - a time of year set aside for area residents to recognize this debilitating disease by giving generously. donations will be accepted by door-to-door canvassers.

The Sudbury & District Branch continues to help send children to summer camp, provides educational material to the public, operates a blood glucose monitor loan service especially for women with pregnancy-onset Diabetes, holds meetings for those interested in learning about living with the disease, arranges seminars for health professionals and supports national and provincial research programs.

Friendship or sex?

Press Release

When you're on a date, are you more interested in friendship than sex?

Is your date more interested in sex than friendship?

Do you put pressure on yourself to "score"?

How do you respond when you are pressured to go further than you really want to?

Do you feel uncomfortable talking about this with your partner?

How often do you find yourself pushing past the first "No"?

If any of the above situations sound familiar, you may be interested in the two hour workshop offered by UNB Counselling Services. Over the last few years, Counselling Services has become increasingly aware of the variety of relationship problems for which students seek help. In an effort to make students aware of the services available to them and to provide students with useful information, an educational presentation has been developed which will focus on assertiveness and sexual expectations in dating relationships.

THE GOALS OF THE PRESENTATION ARE TO:

1. Encourage assertive and honest communications within intimate relationships.
2. Stress the use of communication skills to assure that all sexual activities are consensual.
3. Challenge socialized gender roles:

4. Provide students with enough insight into unhealthy relationship dynamics to be able to connect them with the dynamics of forced sexual encounters.

5. Raise students awareness regarding the definition and scope of date and acquaintance rape.

6. Inform students of university and community resources for dealing with the consequences of sexual assault should it occur.

7. Provide male and female students with strategies for use in preventing date/acquaintance rape.

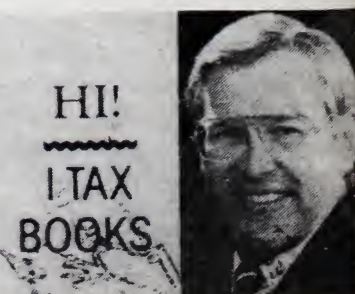

A recent study in the US found that one in six college women are victims of rape or attempted rape each year. In the same study, 54% of women reported experiencing some form of sexual victimization since the age of 14; and 25% of college men had reported involvement in some form of sexual aggression since the age of 14.

The above information demonstrates the prevalence of acquaintance rape and the importance of coeducational programs in universities. This presentation provides for some education regarding the concern of sexual expectations and acquaintance rape.

The workshop is led by one or two facilitators. The workshop activities include: role-playing, skits, values clarification.

ation activities, discussion, and a video on the issue of 'acquaintance rape on campus. It is very helpful to have a coed audience to explore and discuss different views on the topics of discussion.

This workshop is available to be put on for any interested student group, organization, or class. Interested persons please contact Flora Saltanatkhah or Larry Finkelman at UNB Counselling Services at 453-4820

THE ENVIRONMENT AND FREE TRADE

IN 1987, the Brundtland Commission released a report entitled "Our Common Future." This document was the first international endorsement of environmental protection and sustainable resource management. Stating that economic strategies and the environment are not mutually exclusive in the quest for "sustainable economic development", the commission recognized that continuous pressure for economic development at all costs would be detrimental to the environment.

While Prime Minister Mulroney and his Conservative government have repeatedly vowed they are committed to sustainable development, they negotiated the Free Trade Agreement (FTA) with the United States claiming there was nothing in the Deal which would adversely affect the environment.

For example, an official government statement claimed, "The Free Trade Agreement is a commercial accord between the world's two largest trading partners. The environment was not, therefore, a subject for negotiations, nor are environmental matters included in the text of the agreement."

International Trade Minister John Crosbie dug a deeper hole for Mulroney, claiming that water exports are not included in the Deal. Article 409 of the agreement clearly shows they are.

The question of water and free trade is not clear if people believe everything they read and hear. "Is Canada obliged to sell large quantities of water to the United States?" In other words, are we going to divert rivers to the U.S.? If the government is to be believed, only small quantity water sales, like bottled water, are included in the Deal. According to environmentalists, once we turn on the tap, we cannot turn it off again.

The FTA also has adverse results for our parkland and wilderness areas.

by C. Bond, D.J. Darracott, B. Demsey, P. Knowles

Dwindling and unreplenished forest resources have been undermined by the competitiveness of the Canadian forest industry. This industry will become increasingly vigorous in its attempt to gain access to land that is presently protected.

One can look at the current issue of Temagami. This area contains some of North America's last significant old-growth white and red pine ecosystems. These last remaining old-growth trees are being destroyed in Ontario.

These forests have been self-replacing for the last 500-700 years, but once they are logged, in order for them to be restored to their former condition would require hundreds of years. In addition, if we continue to study Temagami, we would gain knowledge that could "revolutionize forestry practices and wildlife protection."

The long term effects of preserving Temagami's old-growth cannot be estimated. The destruction of this old-growth would cause great ecological damage and would forever destroy the recreational opportunities that are available in this wilderness area.

The FTA may also weaken Canada's ability to protect the environment in the area of pesticides and waste. It will be more difficult to control pesticide regulations and waste disposal. Pesticide use in Canada has increased dramatically over the last two decades. An ideal pesticide is one which is highly effective against the target pest while being harmless to all other life-forms. As they are designed to be toxic, many remain active in the environment for long periods of time.

This poses a hazard to health or may have undesirable effects on the environment. Pesticides have become essential to farming due to this, environmentalists claim that the productive capacity of Canadian agricultural lands is being destroyed. In the past decade, as pesticide sales have increased, so is the realization that pesticides must be controlled and carefully supervised.

Recently, the Canadian Environmental Law Association released a report by approximately 90 environmental groups. This report claims, contradicting Mulroney, that the FTA will hurt Canada's efforts to improve the environment, including pesticide regulation.

Presently in the U.S., there are 20% more active pesticide ingredients registered for use and over seven times as many pesticide products. Because the U.S. has this many more available pesticides, including some with the deadly chemical dioxin, it will become easier to licence new pesticides because Canada has been committed to a U.S. regulatory approach.

The main concern of those opponents of free trade in this area, is that the high standards maintained in Canada will be lowered. Canadian safety requirements are commonly seen as tougher than those in the U.S. As the agreement calls for the two countries to work toward "equivalent guidelines, technical regulations, standards and test methods", it is quite possible that Canada will have difficulty maintaining such firm safety standards.

The effects of free trade on Canada's acid rain control legislation seems fairly obvious. The U.S. has already stated that it will take tariff action against companies that receive government subsidies. These subsidies, the Americans claim, are unfair trading practices. In the past, the U.S. has thrown up tariff barriers against the products of a company that received pollution control subsidies.

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) in the U.S. has standards for reducing sulphur emissions, however, there is no enforcement of these standards and no incentives for companies to adopt the pollution controls.

Under the rules of the FTA, Canada will be forced to adopt lower, American pollution control standards. If we do not adopt these standards, our industry will suffer American retaliation for what they claim are unfair trade policies due to Canadian government subsidies for emission controls.

Traces of cocaine use can be found in hair

By Eric Geringas

A University of Toronto graduate student has discovered that a newborn baby's hair can carry evidence of the mother's cocaine use.

Although scientists have known for about five years that cocaine metabolites show up in the hair of users, Karen Graham is the first to study these traces in pregnant women and their babies.

Using a process called radioimmunoassay, Graham can determine how much cocaine a patient used, and depending on how far from the hair's roots the metabolite is found, how recently the patient was taking the drug.

Graham says identifying babies who were exposed to cocaine in the uterus can help doctors diagnose problems after the babies' births. She says the drug causes the same symptoms in babies as in adults: irritability, poor feeding and sleeping, and sometimes seizures (all of which can also have other causes).

There is no special medical treatment for babies who were exposed to cocaine in the uterus, but finding traces of the drug can help doctors rule out more serious neurological problems, Graham adds.

Tracking cocaine exposure in babies could also help scientists study the rate of premature births among women using cocaine.

In adults, hair analysis can be used in the treatment of cocaine addicts, to determine patterns of use, Graham says.

Users are often "very reluctant to tell" how much cocaine they have been taking, she says. "Sometimes they don't know, sometimes they try to give a socially acceptable answer, sometimes they are deliberately misleading."

The hair-sampling technique will also allow doctors to trace a patient's use of cocaine over several months, simply by testing different segments of the hair. By contrast, even the most sophisticated equipment can detect traces of cocaine use in blood and urine for only seven days.

A technique that makes involuntary testing for cocaine use as easy as cutting off a lock of hair raises the possibility that civil liberties could be violated, but Graham says the benefits outweigh the dangers.

Often it is in the baby's best interests that doctors find out whether a mother is using drugs. Graham believes the test can be used "safely and conscientiously", but admits there's a possibility of it being abused.

Graham's study, conducted at the Motherisk clinic at Toronto's Sick Children's Hospital, was funded by the Ontario Ministry of Health.

OSAP Fraud

On August 8, 1989, Peter J. Langes appeared in Provincial Court in Thunder Bay, Ontario, charged with an offence under Section 18(1) of the Canada Student Loans Act.

Langes applied for Canada Student Loan funding through the Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP) for a 1987/88 course of studies at Lakehead University in Thunder Bay. In his application, he stated that he had not nor would not be applying to another province for assistance for the same study period. He was awarded a Canada Student Loan through OSAP. It later came to light that he had also applied for and received Canada Student Loan funding through the Manitoba Student Aid Branch.

Langes pleaded guilty to the charge. He received a conditional discharge and six months probation. This individual is now barred from receiving further financial help under OSAP and the Canada Student Loans Program.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

SGA Presidential Campaign Platform of Christopher L. Trudeau.

As President of the SGA I would ensure sufficient and immediate representation of the following issues:

1 a greater integration of part time and off campus students into University life/activities. Being a university student is not solely attending classes and developing academically but in addition, it is a social and cultural advance whereby the "Laurentian Experience" can be truly realized.

2 language test policy in regards to marking, uniformity and purpose. A greater understanding of the test is what is needed to pass. I seriously doubt that some +60% of the student population is illiterate as per basic academic standards. Rather I would suggest that those who have difficulty in passing do not know exactly what is expected of them. It is my opinion that a greater understanding of the test would eventually lead to a greater number of passing students.

3 student rights in regards to administrative appeals.

4 racism on campus. it is the opinion of the general student population that racism should not be tolerated and that steps should be taken to assure this.

5 an opting out clause within the proposed drug plan.

6 the bank machine which is frequently out of order, usually at the end of the week when needed most.

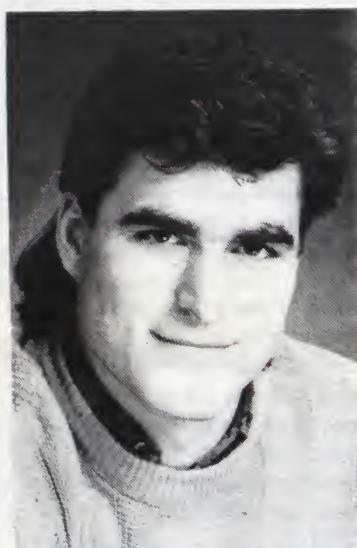

7 inadequate lighting in the parking areas and walkways.

8 CFLR radio. Annually, we as students pay for the broadcast of CFLR radio. Let's promote awareness of CFLR in the upcoming year and take advantage of its benefits.

9 any other student concerns, provided they be personally expressed. If you would like to see something done, then talk to me. Whatever can be done will be done.

SGA Presidential Campaign Platform of Marc Veno.

Hi! My name is Marc Veno and I am a candidate for the 1990-91 SGA Presidency. Throughout my four years at Laurentian University I have been actively involved in the SGA.

My EXPERIENCE certainly reflects the fact that I am more than qualified to serve as your president. Some of my main contributions to you, the student, include:

1987-88 Law and Justice Rep on SGA Council
President of the Law and Justice Society
On Air Announcer for CFLR

1988-89 Student Senator

Student Rep on ACAPLAN (Academic Planning Committee)
Member of the Constitution and Bylaw Revision Committee
Recipient of the President's Award for outstanding contribution to student activities

1989-90 Re-elected Student Senator
Re-appointed to ACAPLAN
Student Rep on the ADHOC Senate Committee on Writing Competency Carney Committee Executive-Program Co-ordinator

The upcoming year will be dedicated to student services. As president, I would;

1. implement a SGA-based fund to be used for the purpose of acquiring library resources (books, journals, etc,...),
2. increase our involvement with the Ontario Federation of Students to become a stronger voice in the lobbying process; this arising out of the recently announced educational spending.

3. the work towards transition to photo ID cards for all students effective in September 1990. It will be implemented universally throughout the campus and will be the recognized form of Laurentian identification (ie Pub, signing out of equipment, etc,...).

4. continue my present work with the Senate Committee on Writing Competency to ensure that all negative implications of the current writing competency requirement are addressed, eventually leading to a better comprehension of what is required by those affected by the test.

5. and work closely with Laurentian Administration, Faculty and Students, to better the image of the Laurentian University community.

I feel that with my past EXPERIENCE, these goals are both clear and attainable. I will also ensure the continuation of progress that the SGA has initiated this past year, such as in the Drug Plan and Student Centre projects. I look forward to working with you in the upcoming year. I hope I can count on your support to ensure a successful 1990-91 school year.

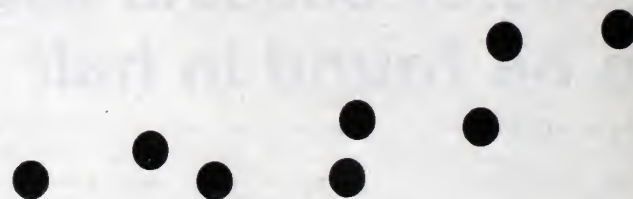

Remember, "make your Marc with Veno!!"

CRIS ET BLUES going on a european tour!...

The Theatre du Nouvel-Ontario is very pleased to announce the european tour of CRIS ET BLUES, a poetry show set to blues music, which last season captivated the audiences in Sudbury, Ottawa and Toronto! CRIS ET BLUES has been invited to participate in the next "Festival International des Franco-phonies" in Limoges, in October 1990. Following the Festival, the show will be presented at the "Centre Georges Pompidou" in Paris. The number of performances will be confirmed at a later date.

As a reminder, CRIS ET BLUES was conceived and created by Jean-Marc Dalpe, winner of the Governor General's Award of Canada, and Marcel Aymar formerly of CANO, accompanied by Marc Cholette and Sylvain Lavoie, and directed by Brigitte Haentjens.

...but first, the ONTARIO TOUR!!

Starting March 9th until April 6th, CRIS ET BLUES will be touring the province of Ontario. This is the first tour organized by the TNO since 1986! Eleven performances are now confirmed: 5 in Northern Ontario, 3 in the Sudbury region, 2 in the East and one in the South.

Itinerary of the tour.

March	4&5	Rehearsals
	9	Glendon
	14	Noelville
	15	Sturgeon Falls
	18	Ottawa
	22	Sault Ste-Marie
	23	Elliot Lake
	24	Chapleau
	29	Kirkland Lake
	30	Iroquois Falls
	31	Hearst
April	7	Orleans

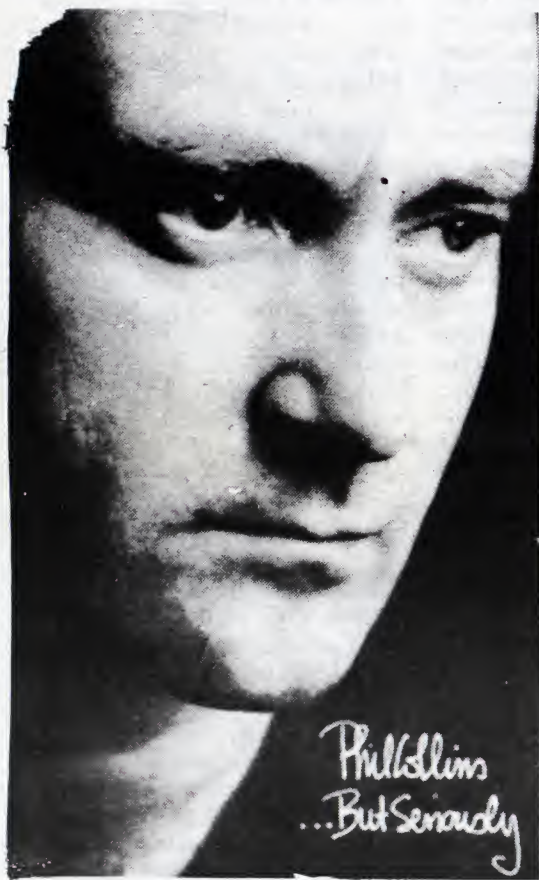

As part of this tour, a series of collaborations with five Northern Ontario communities will take place. These collaborations will allow the TNO to officially initiate an ambitious network project, that of developing a touring network in the Sudbury region and in 15 communities within Northern Ontario.

Because of the increasing difficulty of bringing professional artistic performances in the North, the TNO is already working with some of these communities to develop an alternative mode of collaboration. On one hand, the TNO offers these communities considerable financial support as well as a strong and professional marketing knowhow; on the other hand, the TNO benefits from the already existing local structures and human resources in these communities, to develop strategic planning for increased participation from the public.

The CRIS ET BLUES tour will allow the TNO to test its network project for the first time in the following communities: Noelville, Sturgeon Falls, Elliot Lake, Kirkland Lake and Iroquois Falls.

Phil Collins
...But Seriously
Atlantic
By Dave Neufeld
Toban Staff

This is easily Phil's best effort since Face Value.

The rather meaningless lyrics that weakened both Hello I Must Be Going and No Jacket Required have been replaced by thoughtful, well-crafted lyrics. Tunes like "Colours" and the first single, "Another Day In Paradise" reveal a hitherto unguessed-at social conscience.

Musically, the album stays firmly within familiar territory. Punchy, R & B flavoured numbers like "Hang In Long Enough," with horn stabs courtesy of The Phoenix Horns are mixed with mid-tempo ballads like "Do You Remember."

The playing is workmanlike without seeming uninspired. Eric Clapton's bluesy guitar work on "I Wish It Would Rain Down" is magic as always; and the use of backing vocalists adds a vocal texture missing from past work where it was all Phil.

A special treat is the appearance of David Crosby on "Another Day In Paradise" and the particularly beautiful "That's Just The Way It Is." Crosby's clear tones blend perfectly with Collins' voice for an effect that will send shivers down the most jaded spine. Go out and get this one.

Mark Bannister is a rising young financial planner. His wife, Jessie, is the inquiring reporter at a local Los Angeles television station with a shot at her own anchor slot. They have finally taken the plunge, sinking their life savings — now and for some 30 years to come — into a "starter house" in Santa Monica. It's a cozy hideaway, bordering on cramped. And while the ocean is almost a mile away, a toilet that runs forever (unless someone jiggles the handle) simulates the sound of pounding surf.

But after living in an apartment with paper-thin walls, the Bannisters love their new-found privacy. For the first time since their marriage, they can exercise their conjugal rites without entertaining the neighbours.

Even the post office has blessed the move belatedly, depositing a month's worth of mail on their doorstep. In among the overdue bills is a postcard from Mark's cousin, Fred, the "wild man of Humboldt High" he hasn't seen in 15 years. Fred and his wife, Bernice, are coming to California on vacation...arriving that afternoon...and look forward to staying with the Bannisters.

Mark and Jessie don't know it yet, but they are about to discover a scourge as dangerous, destructive and difficult to get rid of as any ever visited on innocent mankind.

HOUSEGUESTS.

Midler, John Goodman, Trini Alvarado, Stephen Collins and Marsha Mason, and was directed by John Erman from a screenplay by Robert Getchell. "Stella" is produced by Samuel Goldwyn, Jr. The executive producer is David V. Picker and the co-produces is Bonnie Bruckheimer-Martell.

Based on the popular novel Stella Dallas by Olive Higgins Prouty, "Stella" is the touching story of a mother's love for her daughter and the monumental self-sacrifice she endures in order to give her child a better life.

"STELLA"

"It's a great life, if you don't weaken." Stella Claire's (Bette Midler) optimistic philosophy is put to the test throughout her humble and ultimately heartbreaking life.

A wisecracking bartender with a weakness for good times, Stella is fiercely independent — too proud to depend on anyone — even when she finds herself pregnant by handsome doctor Stephen Dallas. Refusing to marry him, she decides to raise their daughter Jenny (Trini Alvarado) single-handedly.

Through the years, Stella and Jenny share a special bond of friendship that goes beyond the usual idea of mother/daughter. But as Jenny blooms into a precocious young woman, Stella is confronted by the reality of their lower-class existence. Wanting only the best for her child, and knowing that Jenny's father can give her all that money can buy, she decides to make the ultimate sacrifice in order to give her daughter the life she never had.

Tragically Hip

by Travis Belrose

Are you sick of Heavy Metal? Or do you find the INXS just doesn't have enough edge to their music? Do you think the Rolling Stones are actually stuck between a rocking chair and a hard place?

If you answered "yes" to any of these questions, then you have to check out The Tragically Hip. This Kingston, Ontario quintet knows how to produce pure rock. They have been described as a band featuring Jim Morrison fronting The Rolling Stones. Their talents, which landed them the key to the city of Memphis, are aptly showcased in their first long play effort, Up To Here.

The album opens on a rocking note with "Blow At High Dough," proceeding to the third and finest track of the LP, the smouldering "New Orleans Is Sinking" (Really it is. At an inch per year). Their output ranges from the clever relationship analysis "Boots Or Hearts" to the haunting "Thirty-Eight Years Old." Up To Here possesses a refreshing vitality on the music scene.

All songs are written by The Tragically Hip; they offer little U2 commentary, but they are serious about their music. There are no fillers, and their talent is definitely worth a good listen. Watch for The Tragically Hip and many other quality Canadian acts that are leaping music into the 90's.

From End To Beginning

It was film-maker Michelangelo Antonioni, who when asked whether a film should have "a beginning, a middle and an end," reportedly replied: "Definitely." Then after a pause added: "But not necessarily in that order." This is the precept of Harold Pinter's BETRAYAL, opening at STC February 20 and running until March 11, for Pinter starts his play at the end and then it is told in one continuous flashback.

BETRAYAL begins with a meeting between "Emma" and "Jerry", who have not seen each other since their seven-year affair ended two years before. "Emma's" long marriage to "Robert" is breaking up and she needs to talk. The story seems simple enough at first encounter. In the beginning an affair ends. Then we leapfrog our way to the moments that counted most during the seven-year dalliance.

BETRAYAL has a cast familiar to Sudbury audiences. making a welcome return to the STC stage is Marcia Kash in the role of "Emma", the wife and art gallery manager. An accomplished actress, Ms. Kash has previously appeared for STC as "Rita" in Educating Rita, "Faye" in Chapter Two and "Catherine" in Waiting for the Parade.

The husband and publisher "Robert" will be played by Simon Joynes who has been seen in several STC shows including When We Are Married, Veronica's Room and Dracula, The Musical? Richard Thornton who was last seen in Towards Zero and The Mouse Trap for STC will portray the literary agent "Jerry", "Robert's" best friend and "Emma's" lover.

Making his 24th appearance for STC, the most recent being The Night of the Iguana, is Guy Sanvido, making a cameo appearance as the waiter.

Turning the clock backward to ensure that time moves forward is director Lawrie Seligman's challenge. "It is not so much back to the future as forward to the past" says Mr. Seligman who has had a very active and varied career working in Theatre, Television, Radio and Opera over the past eighteen years.

BETRAYAL will be designed by STC's Resident Designer, Robert Ivey, while the lighting design will be handled by Simon Day who also doubles as the Stage Manager.

MuchMusic: Don't believe the hype

MuchMusic's recent ban on all videos by the rap group Public Enemy has opened quite a large can of worms.

In the February 7 edition of FAX, programmer John Martin told Kim Clarke Champriss that MuchMusic will no longer be airing PE's videos because, "The band has a history of anti-semitism," and "there's no reason why I should endorse that kind of mind -- I think it's sick."

ANDREW EPSTEIN

Whether or not PE are racist is not up for debate -- frankly, they have made many indefensibly racist remarks in the past, and shown little remorse over them.

What should be discussed is whether the fact that they are personally reprehensible should dictate their status as performers. Secondly: is Much using a double standard, banning black groups for being anti-white, but supporting white bands that are anti-black?

In order to put the situation into its proper context, it is important to realize the function of Rock videos. They are promotional items used to publicize artists' records. Thus, a show that plays videos is actively endorsing those artists to its viewers. With that in mind, it is perfectly within Martin's rights to decide what he will or will not endorse.

Considering that the majority of MuchMusic's viewers are young people, it is commendable that the station has publicly stated that racism is not acceptable. Hopefully people will realize that there should be no forum for people to voice opinions which are reprehensible.

What Martin is implicitly saying by refusing to impose a similar ban on groups like Guns 'n' Roses, is that racism against blacks, or misogyny is acceptable.

Surprisingly, Clarke-Champriss refused to toady to Martin and took an aggressive stance in their on-air interview. He asked Martin if he would ban Guns 'n' Roses, taking their reference to "niggers and immigrants" in the song, "One in a Million" as an example.

"There was no video for that song. There has never been, on record, anybody supporting one line of lyric from that song," Martin replied.

When Clarke-Champriss reminded him that there was no video for the PE song "Welcome to the Terrordome," the song that got them into trouble, Martin became visibly flustered.

"Let me rephrase: We're a rock 'n' roll station. People should be angry. An artist in a lyric can say whatever he wants as a character in context. That's Guns with one line in one song. It's not the same as systematic anti-semitism."

If Martin would like proof of a "systematic" endorsement of racist and sexist values by Guns, he should check the lyric sheet of their debut album, Appetite for Destruction:

Turn around bitch I got a use for you / Besides you got nothin' better to do / and I'm bored. ("It's So Easy") Or, Panties 'round your knees / Ass in debris / doin' dat grind with a push and a squeeze / Tied up tied down, up against the wall. ("Anything Goes").

If these lyrics, published in 1987, don't show a set of values that have been systematically endorsed for three years, then one can check elsewhere.

On the Rolling Stones' recent

Detail from Guns 'n' Roses debut LP Appetite for Destruction: At least it's not anti-semitic tour both Guns 'n' Roses and Black rock group Living Color opened for them in L.A. Guitarist Izzy Stradlin of Guns came to blows with Vernon Reid, lead singer for Living Color, after he used the term "nigger" on stage.

"If you've got nothing against Blacks, don't call us niggers."

The next night Axl Rose made a speech saying that he had nothing against "Niggers or Faggots, as long as they don't try to rape me."

To his credit, Reid did not answer in kind. During the intro to their song about Malcolm X,

"The Cult of Personality," Reid had the band members stop their playing, and simply stated, "If you've got nothing against Blacks, don't call us niggers, and if you've got nothing against homosexuals, don't call them faggots."

If MuchMusic continues with their ban on Public Enemy, and refuses to apply the same measures to equally ignorant and racist white groups, they too are guilty of bigotry and hypocrisy. (See inset)

"MuchMusic makes the distinction between those artists who are occasionally Rock 'n' Roll jerks and those who represent a systematic philosophy of hatred.

QUIZ

(CUP) — At this time of year, when the stress level is at its highest, have you ever wished you were back in kindergarten class? Back where your biggest problem was whether or not you'd be able to hold it until it was your turn to use the bathroom? As the fall semester draws to a close, even those who are usually calm, cool, collected human beings have experienced waking up in the middle of the night in a cold sweat with the stark realization that they have essay papers due every 24 hours for the next two weeks. That's when you ask yourself why you ever came to university in the first place, and why you have more work and less spare time than every other human being on the planet. The following quiz is designed to help establish your stress level and perhaps give some insight on whether your heading straight for a cliff or are falling gracefully into an easy chair. Good luck, and don't bite your pencil!

- 1. In your spare time, do you:
 a) beat up nerds with plastic pencil pocket protectors (1 point)
 b) go for coffee because you can't take too long a break (2)

15-20 points:

Sphincter-out man! You're so relaxed you're comatose. Ever heard of amphetamines? Watch a soap opera, the stress would do you some good.

21-36 points:

Not much to worry about. You know what classes you're registered in and are confident you'll eventually get around to checking a few of them out.

36-45:

Borderline. You may be a little too dedicated to your work. Check your study chair to see if your bum imprint has worn in.

46-100:

You're definitely a tunnel troll. You have a pale complexion and dark-ringed eyes, you wear old track pants with those little curdles on them, your shoes are never tied, you chew your upper lip, and you mumble to yourself all too often. Get another life—this one has expired. You might consider yoga, a sensory deprivation tank, or a new pair of bunny slippers.
